駒場の「知」を明日の東大生につなげていくためにわたしたちができること

Greetings

Hello, we are Komaba Library Staff. Three months have passed since the start of the new academic year, and we hope you have enjoyed your university life.

Komaba Library is usually used by many students and others, especially it is quite crowded before exams from opening to closing. Around this time of year, the number of various accidents is on the rise, for example, violations of manners and damaged books.

We receive books that are damaged, stained, or have writing problems every day. The most troublesome of these is damaged by water. Once wet, the paper becomes wrinkled and bent. If the paper is not dried properly, mold can form and affect the books that are placed next to it. It is extremely difficult to restore it to its original condition.

In this exhibition, we will present examples of accidents such as stains and damage to books that are common in libraries, with a focus on water-damaged books. We also explained about the manners in the library.

Books are an important asset of the university and are shared by all users. For using the library and books comfortably, a little thoughtfulness and cooperation by users is necessary. Let's learn about the proper handling of books and manners with Komato-chan!
